

Advocacy Certificate for Human Genetics and Genomics Trainees (ACGT) Program

The new ACGT program aims to introduce trainee ASHG members to the world of science policy and advocacy while building their professional skills. This competitive, year-long program is designed for trainees who are interested in pursuing a research or clinical career but who would like to explore policy and what it means to be an advocate for human genetics and genomics research.

ACGT activities include:

- Participating in a Hill Day and engaging with Congressional staff.
- Attending training workshops on key federal budget and policy issues.
- Contributing to the development of ASHG's advocacy materials in support of NIH funding.
- Completing an individual policy project or activity on a specific policy topic.
